To Rutland Go

“To Rutland Go,” by Thomas Rowley, was a poem written about the land grants that were given by the New Hampshire government that later became Vermont. The land was disputed by New York, and the poem is a satirical writing explaining the toils and the decisions made by New Hampshire. Included alongside the poem are paintings done by Zulma Delacy Dorr Steele, and then a discussion about both illustrator, author, and the historical and literary context of the work. At the end of this quarterly, a description of the author of, “To Rutland Go,” Thomas Rowley, is given.
