Rutland Schools

The front and back cover pictures Rutland High School students and faculty circa 1897, with a partial listing of names included on the opening page.

Thomas E. Ripley describes his early school experiences from a passage of his book A Vermont Boyhood, followed by Julia Dorr's reminiscence of the "Academy" a part of the old town hall. This concludes with a section from "When I was a School-Girl" published in Harpers Bazaar in 1912, donated by Frank Sullivan.

A final selection of pictures feature Longfellow School under construction in 1890; an early sketch of the Rutland English and Classical Institute, and a photo of the RECI football team in 1895.

An added piece of humor includes a football cartoon by William O'Neil of a last minute play, Rutland vs. West Rutland, published in the 1932 issue of the West Rutland High School "Green and Gold".
